Williams died in Fargo Hospital (located at the large military training grounds of Salisbury Plain, Wiltshire, England) on June 2, 1917. Driver Williams did not die on the battlefields of France, but rather passed away from illness or an accident while serving on the home front in the United Kingdom. He was stationed at or near the massive military encampments on Salisbury Plain when he was admitted to Fargo Military Hospital. This hospital was a major tented and hutted medical facility built specifically to treat soldiers training in the Wiltshire area during World War I. He succumbed there on June 2, 1917. Driver J.P. Williams did not deploy to the European theatre of operations (such as France or Flanders) during World War I. Why He Didn't Deploy Stationed in the Reserve: He was assigned to the Reserve Battery of the Honourable Artillery Company. The primary role of reserve batteries during the war was to train men and provide replacements for the active units serving abroad, rather than deploying as a whole unit. Home Service Status: He enlisted in London on January 25, 1915. His entire service record took place within the United Kingdom on "Home Service." Location of Death: Because he remained in the UK for training and reserve duties, he was stationed at Salisbury Plain in Wiltshire when he fell ill or suffered an accident, ultimately passing away at the domestic Fargo Military Hospital. Because he never served in an active theatre of war overseas, he would not have been eligible for the British War Medal or the Victory Medal, which required a soldier to have crossed an official theatre boundary.

Story of Scarifice

John Percival Williams (1894–1917)

John Percival Williams was a Wealdstone resident who worked as a clerk in a stockbroker's office before enlisting in the Honourable Artillery Company in January 1915. He served on home service at Larkhill Camp on Salisbury Plain and died aged 23 in June 1917 after being severely injured by his horse.

Civilian Life

John Percival Williams was born in Forest Gate, Essex, around 1894. By 1911 he was living with his family in Wealdstone and working as a clerk in a stockbroker's office. He was the third son of Stephen Evans Williams and Charlotte Williams, whose home was at Enderley on High Road, Wealdstone. His father was the publisher of a weekly periodical. Before enlisting, Williams was a member of the Special Constabulary. He was also connected with the Lower School of John Lyon, where his name appears on the school's First World War memorial plaque and sundial.

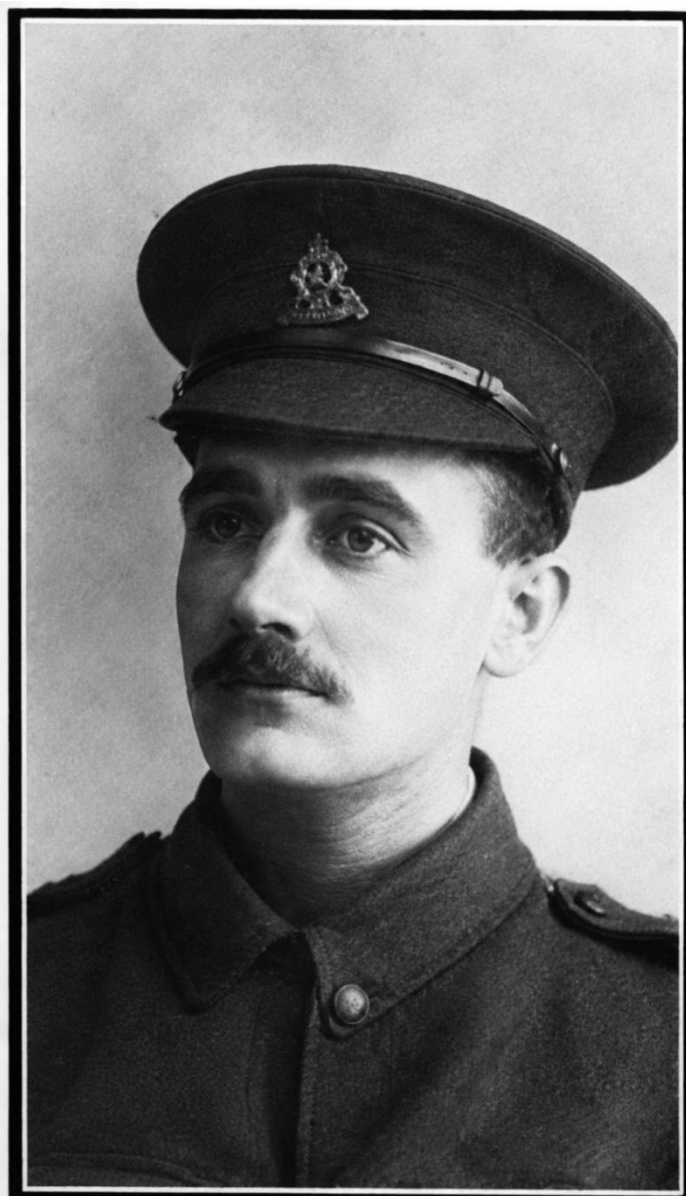

Military Life

Williams enlisted in London in January 1915 and joined the Honourable Artillery Company (HAC). He served as a Driver with the 2a Battery, attached to the 126th Brigade, Royal Field Artillery, and was stationed at Larkhill Camp on Salisbury Plain.

He served in the United Kingdom and did not deploy overseas. He was assigned to the Reserve Battery of the Honourable Artillery Company. The primary role of reserve batteries during the war was to train men and provide replacements for the active units serving abroad, rather than deploying as a whole unit. On 30 May 1917, he returned to Larkhill after his final leave. On 1 June, he was severely kicked by his horse. He was taken to Fargo Military Hospital, where he died from his injuries the following day, 2 June 1917, aged 23. Williams was buried at Harrow Weald Cemetery on 9 June 1917.

His funeral was attended by family, friends, fellow members of the HAC, members of the Special Constabulary and other local residents. The service concluded with the Last Post sounded by HAC buglers from the Tower. His death was recorded on the John Lyon School memorials and the Harrow Weald Street Shrine War Memorial. He had two other brothers serving in the H.A.C. and another brother is with the Australian Field Force.
